Abstract. Since the earliest times, man has used leather and textiles to protect himself against low and high temperature, rain, sun, wind etc. Due to their permeability to water vapor both materials stand for a high wearing comfort. Leather protects extremely well against wind, high and low temperature but is not easy to clean.

The basis of all extraction procedures is described in the Nernst's distribution law. [1]. A substance distributes itself between two immiscible solvents, or between a liquid and a solid phase, so that the ratio of this concentration in the two phases is constant. The system's specific constant ratio is described as the Nernst.

ABSTRACT. In this work we investigate the plastic instabilities associated with the Portevin-Le Chatelier (PLC) effect in Al alloy 2024. A semi-phenomenological approach is taken. A simple geometrically non-linear elastic-viscoplastic constitutive model is proposed for simulation of material response under various applied.
